

Did You Know?

Having a community that trusts and feels protected by their officers can make the job not only more rewarding but more effective. VirTra believes in strengthening the relationship between police and the communities they serve. Having a training simulator can not only help law enforcement who use it, but it is often used as a tool to educate citizens on the complexities of police work.

Media Outreach

Engaging with community media provides police departments with a valuable opportunity to share their mission and objectives through online and TV broadcasts. This outreach also fosters partnerships with local businesses, demonstrating a strong commitment to building meaningful relationships within the community.

Community Events

Participating in community-hosted events allows officers to become familiar and approachable figures, fostering personal connections with residents. Law enforcement agencies can also organize their own events and invite community members to attend, creating opportunities for the public to learn more about the agency and its personnel. These police-community engagement activities serve as a meaningful platform to communicate the department's mission and public safety goals.

What Can I, as a Citizen, Do to Help?

Once you understand the benefits and applications of simulation training, identify the right point of contact – whether it is a training commander or a community liaison. Submit a proposal or leverage community forums like city council meetings, making sure to include information that helps support the agency's need for high tech training.
